THE INTRODUCTION

Likely you're reading this because of one of two reasons. It's either (a) someone in your life is a Trump supporter and you're trying to figure out how best to talk to them about it as the election approaches, or it's (b) you are a Trump supporter and someone told you about this, like maybe there was a break during a rally and you took your hood off for a second to get some air and your friend saw you and mentioned it to you.

If that first option is you, then please treat the rest of this book as a template of sorts, or like a conversation guide. It will help you figure out the appropriate response for when a Trump supporter is trying to talk to you about just about anything. If that second option is you, then also please treat the rest of this book as a template of sorts, or like a conversation guide, except but in reverse. If you find yourself wanting to talk about something with someone who is not a Trump supporter (like maybe movies, or music perhaps, or possibly which Alex Jones rant videos are the best to masturbate to), simply search the book for the appropriate section, pick whatever response there you like, and there you go. It's going to save everyone a lot of time.

Thank you.
